This is a three day workshop to introduce practitioners to working with the military. This workshop is not meant to be comprehensive, but rather a starting point for EAGALA model practitioners working with the military to consider the different challenges the military and their families face in different stages of their military career (pre-deployment, deployment, post-deployment, re-deployment and veteran status). Day one will look at resiliency and its importance throughout the cycle of military life for the person in uniform and their family. Day two looks at issues the person in uniform faces and day three deals with issues related to spouse, family and children. There is a balanced mix of educational /informational aspects with the opportunity to practice what was learned with the horses.

The fee is $500 and lunch is included. Reservations are required.
